Board of Regents Votes Unanimously to Fund Residence Hall at UMC

By Elizabeth Tollefson on Thursday, July 7, 2005

The University of Minnesota Board of Regents this week unanimously approved a new 84-bed residence hall at the University of Minnesota, Crookston (UMC). “The Regents are investing in UMC and its future,” said Richard Nelson, associate vice chancellor for academic affairs, “ this exciting project is another example of UMC’s commitment to excellence for its students, and a vote of confidence from the Board of Regents.”

The project consists of a two-story residential building with apartment-style living. A commons area will join the new residence hall to Westside apartments and house residential life offices, student lounges, and multipurpose meeting space for both buildings. The residence hall at UMC, dubbed Centennial hall, is appropriately named since the campus kicked off its centennial celebration in June. The project follows the construction of a new student center that opened in June and will be dedicated this fall. A groundbreaking will take place this summer for the new residence hall and occupancy will take place in the summer of 2006.
